MTA Chairman Jay Walder held court for the last time yesterday at his final MTA board meeting before he leaves Oct. 21.

Walder was plucked from his $350,000 MTA gig to work for MTR Corporation in Hong Kong, a company that runs rail services in Europe and Asia, for a nearly $1 million salary.

Gov. Andrew Cuomo must appoint a new chair by Walder's last day.

When Walder came onboard, many hoped he would revolutionize the MTA with his management know-how. He saved the MTA millions by cutting costs and can be thanked for the countdown clocks.

And, thanks to a state budget crunch, he was forced to kill two subway lines and implement a massive fare hike. Walder also axed 254 cleaners, leaving trains dirtier.

@ METRO

Transparency

Upon taking control of the MTA, Walder promised better communication. He vowed to clear up confusing signage and redesign the authority's website. He rolled out a new website in May 2010 and more signs than ever before now paper the subways.

Quoted

"In a different world, in a different way, all of the energy would've gone to improving services and that would have been great. You have to play the hand you're dealt." WALDER

Buses

When Walder first came to the MTA from London, he was eager to replicate the British bus system. Yes, he expanded Select Bus Service and improved busonly lanes. But that progress is far outweighed by the massive bus cuts he enacted last year.

Fare collection

Walder implemented the Oyster Card in London, a contactless transit card. He wants to replace the MetroCard with a similar tap system, but don't hold your breath. The futuristic cards refill automatically, and would reduce costs and congestion.

Cost savings

Another area where Walder delivered: Under his "Making Every Dollar Count" plan, the MTA has undergone unprecedented cost-cutting measures. More than 600 administrative employees were laid off, resulting in $50 million worth of savings.

Countdown clocks

The most visible change on the subways: Countdown clocks were installed at more than 150 stations, providing riders with real-time train arrival information. The clocks aren't systemwide yet, however, and they aren't always accurate, either.

Crime

Last year, Walder removed 450 station agents. Some riders say that fewer MTA employees leave riders more vulnerable to crime - and some even fear that their absence has caused crime to skyrocket. Robbery is up nearly 40 percent from last year.

Service improvement

Just months after assuming the helm of the MTA, Walder oversaw an unprecedented amount of service cuts, necessary as the MTA desperately needed to close a $900 million budget gap, he said. The $104 monthly MetroCard didn't help much, either.

Men save women from sex attacks

Queens man helps woman being attacked yesterday
 Last month, Bronx man saves woman in his lobby

Two New York men stepped up to help women in trouble, risking their own safety to protect women who were being attacked.

Brian Teichman, a Marine, was dropping his daughter off at day care yesterday in Whitestone, Queens, when he saw a man forcing a woman over a guardrail of the Cross Island Parkway. The 31-year-old veteran, who served five years in Iraq and Afghanistan, said the scene just didn't look right.

"Once I saw him launch her over the guardrail I knew something was wrong," he told the New York Post.

Statewide support slips for Gillibrand

NEW YORK. Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand's support is slipping in New York state, according to a Siena poll released Tuesday.

The senator, who had surged in popularity after successfully taking on issues like the 9/11 health care bill, which she helped get passed, fell in popularity last month. Out of voters surveyed, 45 percent said they would re-elect the senator — that number was 49 percent last month. Many other Democratic members of Congress are also suffering in the polls this year.

More than one-third of voters said they'd like to see someone new in office instead of Gillibrand. Sen. Charles Schumer's rating has also slipped, down from 67 percent to 59 percent. © METRO/AB

Wall Street shrugs off protesters

Those who work on Wall Street are ostensibly the subject of fury from the Occupy Wall Street crowd. Except many say they are confused as to what exactly it is the protesters want.

"I think they should focus their efforts on something that is more worth their time and stop disrupting our workday," said investment banker Dave S., who did not want his last name published.

Another Wall Streeter told Metro he sympathizes with some of the protesters' messages, but thinks their perception might be off.

Comeback kid Michele Bachmann?

Republican presidential hopeful Michele Bachmann, struggling to reverse a slide in opinion polls, told evangelical Christians yesterday that she would be "the comeback kid" in the nomination race.

During a stop at Liberty University, Bachmann shrugged off her recent campaign troubles and vowed to turn around her White House bid with a heavy focus on conservative Iowa and South Carolina.

"We intend to be the comeback kid in this race," Bachmann told reporters after a speech at Liberty, which bills itself as the largest evangelical Chris-

Jurors hear different views of MJ's health

Michael Jackson's doctor made repeated assurances about the "excellent condition" of the pop star in the weeks before his sudden death, jurors in the manslaughter trial of the physician were told yesterday.

Dr. Conrad Murray, on trial for causing the June 2009 death of the pop singer, also told an attorney working on Jackson's career comeback that the singer's medical records for the past five years "would be very tiny," one lawyer testified.

"Dr. Murray told me repeatedly that Michael Jackson was perfectly healthy, in excellent condition," Los Angeles lawyer Kathy Jorrie said on the witness stand in the second day of Murray's trial on a charge of involuntary manslaughter.

Murray's assurances to Jorrie, up until the eve of Jackson's death, clashed with testimony on Tuesday from Kenny Ortega, the director of the planned "This Is It" concerts.

Ortega testified that less than a week before Jackson's death, the singer turned up at a rehearsal chilled, incoherent and psychologically troubled. REUTERS

Ala. judge rules on immigration law

O Schools must now check residency status O But not a crime to knowingly harbor or transport an immigrant

A federal judge yesterday blocked parts of Alabama's crackdown on illegal immigration, but let stand a controversial provision requiring public schools to determine the legal residency of children.

The Alabama law is widely seen as the toughest state measure on illegal immigration.

Chief U.S. District Judge Sharon Lovelace Blackburn ruled the state could require police to detain people suspected of being in the United States illegally if they cannot produce proper documentation when stopped for any reason.

She also refused to block the provision requiring public schools to determine, by reviewing birth certificates or sworn affidavits, the legal residency status of students upon enrollment.

But the ruling temporarily prevents the state from making it a crime to knowingly transport or harbor an illegal immigrant.

President Obama's administration and other groups sought to block the law, saying it violated the U.S. Constitution and would turn into criminals Alabama residents who interact with those in the country without documents.

Supporters of the law argue the federal government's failure to crack down on illegal immigration forced the state to take action.

Federal judges have previously blocked key parts of other immigration laws passed in Georgia, Arizona, Utah and Indiana. REUTERS

Kate Gosselin still can't find work

Out of all of the Americans who can't find work, there's only one I'm actually happy to hear about: Kate Gosselin.

According to a new article in the Huffington Post, the reality TV star and super-breeder can't find TV work and is discouraged by the lack of offers coming her way since "Kate Plus 8" went off the air.

"She has approached many different networks, including pitching a travel show idea to her old network, TLC, but so far no one has said yes," a source told the site. "She assumed that given her fame, producers and networks would be knocking her over with job offers and is, to say the least, very surprised that she hasn't received a single one."

Earlier this month, Kate told Matt Lauer from "The Today Show" that "at this point, the best opportunity for [my family] would be me continuing on TV as a way to provide for my kids. Something that's exciting and challenging for me has been TV, and I wouldn't be opposed to it."

If she gets really desperate (after all — no one is going to give her free plastic surgery now that she's not on TV) why not put the kids back to work, like she's always done? Here are four night (oh come on, like you suggestions for her brood:

Leal, Kutcher and Moore: What's going on?

Seems that Aston Kutcher hasn't just taken over Charlie Sheen's old role on "Two and a Half Men." It looks as though Kutcher, 33, has picked up a page from Sheen's real life bad-behavior playbook as allegations are flying that the star cheated on wife Demi Moore - on the weekend of their sixth wedding anniversary.

Sara Leal, 23, has come forward with the bombshell claim that she had sex with Kutcher after they met at a San Diego club last Friday. Kutcher was there celebrating with Danny Masterson for his birthday — the same weekend of his anniversary with Moore, according to Radar Online. Leal has gone into hiding, but not before lawyering up with a Hollywood attorney. TheDirty.com that he and Moore were "separated, but the public just didn't know yet."

Much as been made of the fact that not only was Kutcher partying on their anniversary, but he and Moore were even on different coasts — Moore was in New York City working on the upcoming film "Magic Mike."

There's no official word from the couple's publicists, but Moore sent this Tweet by the Greek philosopher Epictetus last week."When we are offended at any man's fault, turn to yourself & study your own failings.

Remember the everyday fallen

Nov. 6 is National Remembrance Day for those killed by illegal aliens. While our men and woman are dying in Iraq and Afghanistan fighting al-Qaeda and Taliban, innocent U.S. citizens are dying at the hands of illegal aliens at work or home. Anger from the Tea Party

RE: "FALSE ORIGINS OF A FALSE PARTY": Fact: The Midnight Ride was to warn of the impending gun and powder grab the British were going to do as a precursor to more taxes. The Tea Party takes a heritage of standing against tyrannical incursions as our name. I am proud to be standing against this little communist uprising. Besides, it's better to be a tea bag than a d-bag. BUTCH CASS, VIA E-MAIL

I have been reading many letters in your paper deriding members of the Tea

Party as "teabaggers." This sexually explicit and perhaps even homophobic slur is quite ubiquitous among our fellow Americans on the left side of the political divide. Seeing how such a term expressing hate and dismissal is now a legitimate part of our political lexicon, is it now safe for me to refer to opponents of the Tea Party as "peter puffers"? Tax paying: It's in the bible

To those tax-protesters who are also Biblethumpers: Find that wellthumbed page which says, "Render unto the Caesar the things that are Caesar's." A gal walks into a bar

Each week we ask a different celebrity what they look for in a spot when going out. This week, tUnE-yArDs singer Merrill Garbus talks about what she likes in her nightlife experience — or, rather, in her workplace.

What's your drink of choice? "Kombucha. Ginger."

What kind of atmosphere do you look for in the ideal place to eat/drink?
"I like home. So places that feel like home, I suppose."

What's your favorite bar in the world?

"Oh, jeez. Bars are hard because they're my workplace so it's like saying, 'What's your favorite desk in the world?' or something, which I suppose is a fair question. There's one in Philadelphia that has a really '20s kind of vibe that I went to at a friend's wedding.

The waiter was wearing suspenders. I'm not that into spending money on alcohol."

The New York City Food & Wine Festival kicks off

This year's Wine and Food Festival will convince you that you can, in fact, whip up restaurant-style food at home — even if it's just a fancy burger.

This weekend's annual festival — where all ticket proceeds benefit the Food Bank For New York City — boasts amped-up burgers, tacos, sandwiches and chefs aiming to persuade you, takeout-addicted New Yorker, that gourmet is possible in an impossibly tiny city kitchen.

"Iron Chef" winner and chef Marc Forgione, from his namesake downtown restaurant, will be on hand for Friday night's "Blue Moon Burger Bash," where Whoopi Goldberg will try more than 21 bunned specialties.

Forgione's "hangover burger" brings "punch, something to make you feel better after partying all night," he says.

Food Network chef Marcela Valladolid also wants you to mix up your meals. She, with kitchen commanders like Bobby Flay, show off 30 different taco inspirations at Saturday night's "The Art of the

Fill your glass

With all this eating, don't forget the "wine" aspect of the Wine and Food Festival. Some highlights? Friday night's "Meatpacking Uncorked," where Mo Rocca and Debi Mazar will be on hand to discuss wines while Meatpacking District restaurants will serve snacks. After a glass or two, head to Villa Pacri, where your ticket gets you a dance party. If that cy, $110 will get you into The Standard Saturday for a noon tasting of cabernets hosted by master sommelier Laura DePasquale. Pair this with a Saturday session on American cheese hosted by cheese-expert Laura Werlin, who promises to "make cheese simple," adding: "I think cheese for a lot of people is as intimidating as wine." If wine's not your thing, go to Saturday's "Cocktails and Caviar" at the Dream Downtown.

Taco."

Valladolid counsels buying tortillas with less than three ingredients — and keeping them dry by wrapping them in a napkin.

"There's nothing worse than a soggy taco," she says.

And don't be ashamed if you'd rather chat than chomp. Sit in at a Saturday panel to hear Mario Batali's take on what makes a great restaurant experience or listen to experts talking about sustainable dining.

Like every year, the festival also aims to make you yearn to spend more hours in the kitchen.

Get inspired as Tribeca great David Bouley produces his latest inventions in the Bouley Test Kitchen at the Whole Foods-sponsored "New Culinary Discoveries" on Friday. And in Sunday's "Meatball Shop," allow Lower East Side Meatball Shop chef Daniel Holzman introduce you to flavors you never thought possible, like crab meatballs or lamb meatballs with black trumpet mushrooms.

Join the club

Each week, we tell you about the songs you should be sweating to in clubs.

'I'm Still Hot'

Why has it taken humankind so long to realize that if you record a song about how sexy you are, it will be a huge success? This song, currently No. 3 on the Billboard club chart. does Mims' "This Is Why I'm Hot" one better by not just rattling off reasons for attraction as much as listing the ways that the singer is such a horrible person. Luciana hooked up with your best friend, stood you up again and bummed your last cigarette. And that's just within the first minute. But guess what? She's still hot! O PAT HEALY

The Ettes are 'Wicked' cool

A singer who calls herself Coco talks about her band's creepy, dark sound - and where it comes from Lindsay Hames has always been weird. At least that's what her family says. According to the singer and guitarist for the Ettes, who goes by the stage name of Coco, her father saw her band's show and found it in keeping with her character.

"My dad came to see us when we played Asheville, and my dad was like: 'You've always been this way. You are so weird," she reveals with an almost mischievous giggle. "In our house, I painted all the walls black when I was like 10, and I'd always have the shades down like some crazy cave den."

Whether she realizes it or not, Coco has actually made a pretty accurate metaphor for the most recent Ettes album, "Wicked Will." And just like "some crazy cave den," it is dark and creepy, yet there is a playful energy that might turn into a pillow fight at any moment.

"I like creeping people out, and I like being creeped out a little bit," says Coco.

Many of the songs on "Wicked Will" have themes of sizing up opponents. Hames jokes that she doesn't start fights, but she ends them. "I like all art forms when it has an air of menace about it," she says.

Prize-winning Salvadoran delights, available in Brooklyn

Solber Pupusas, a food truck specializing in Central American corn patties, take top honors at this year's Vendy Awards ♥ What's next for the business

Food trucks boasting haute cuisine like Korean barbecue and Jamaican jerk chicken took over Governor's Island last weekend for the seventh annual Vendy Awards, which honor the best in street cart cookery. The grand prize, the coveted Vendy Cup, went to Solber Pupusas, a husband-and-wife team that serves the traditional Salvadoran dish of corn patties stuffed with fillings to your liking. We spoke with Cesar Fuentes, whose parents Reina Bermudez-Soler and Rafael Soler began the business 12 years ago, about their big win.

How did the business begin?

The experience began at the Red Hook Ball Fields. My mother and her husband became part of this group called the Red Hook Food Vendors, about a group of 12 separately owned food businesses, and they began in there. At making food that needed to be shared.

What went through your mind when you found out you won? It took a few seconds but to me the first thing in my mind was just looking at my mother and at Rafael and thinking back at the 12 years. [My parents'] first sale was a cup of coffee and they forgot to bring change because they were so new at it. I looked at them, I looked at the truck and I looked around and I said 'Wow.' I am so proud of what my mother has done. It was an amazing experience to be able to represent the food that my mother prepares. [Everyone who voted voted not for us, they voted for the pupusas, they voted for what it means to be a street vendor who struggles and who becomes accepted. And the change is good. It's an amazing moment that's happened. It will stay with us for a very long time.

What's next?

What's next for your business more trucks? A store?

My family entered the incubator project called Hot Bread Kitchen in Harlem. It's an incubator to help minority women, to provide microentrepreneurs a cooking space. Our plan now is, through the incubator, to start manufacturing pupusas, and given that our products are only sold throughout the summer, we would love to see our pupusas in the shelves of supermarkets. Our plan is for now seeing how we expand, and hopefully at some point [we'll] get our own restaurant. I think that would be the ultimate dream for my mom.

Shifting rules are hurting Jets' pass defense

It isn't quite as easy as knowing when to "hold 'em" and when to "fold 'em," but the Jets' secondary must learn how to walk the fine line between aggressive football and plays that will lead to penalties.

Last week in Oakland, the secondary struggled with penalties, getting flagged five times. Now, with Joe Flacco coming off a 389-yard, three touchdown passing performance in Week 3, the Jets must cut out the whistles.

Head coach Rex Ryan complained that the rules are hampering his cornerbacks.

"We didn't do ourselves any favors by having five defensive penalties in that game," Ryan said. "It gives you five more possessions basically. That's going to kill you. But it's much harder to play defense." O KRISTIAN DYER

OGiants quickly shift focus from Eagles to Cardinals OC Coughlin worried about team living in last week () Kolb leads vastly different Arizona team

The Giants began preparing for the Cardinals yesterday, still riding high off their beatdown of the Eagles.

Yet, head coach Tom Coughlin said in order to give their next opponent its undivided attention, they'd have to forget all about the Eagles.

"Last week's win is over. We can't go into this game with great confidence if we're not prepared," Coughlin said. "We're preparing ourselves for the Arizona Cardinals, a good football team that had a lot of changes this offseason. They've lost some close games and this isn't a normal 1-2 team. They've lost both games by a total of four points."

The Cardinals have undergone a huge change, adding Kevin Kolb and Todd Heap.

"We don't know this team very well ... so there'll have to be extra time put in to be prepared for them," Coughlin said.

Field yesterday as Jose Reyes strode to the plate for his first at-bat was one of total appreciation.

That quickly changed after Reyes was pulled from the Mets' 3-0 win following his bunt single to lead off the inning. As Reyes walked to the dugout - replaced by pinch runner Justin Turner - the decision was heavily booed by those in attendance and became a hot button topic on social media networks.

"We talked this morning, Jose, when he came in [and] I asked him how he wanted to go about this. I wanted to take him out at the appropriate time. He said if he got a hit his first time up, he'd like to come out," Collins said.

Reyes's .337 average led Ryan Braun by two onethousandths of a point in the NL batting race. Braun had entered last night's game against the Pirates needing three hits to pass Reyes. No Met player had ever won a batting title.

"I heard some comments from the stands. I don't blame them. People pay a good price to come to these games and they have to understand I ask these players to do a lot. We worked hard to get
